

themselves to defer a final allocation of those costs until after they complete contribution litigation against others. In this common arrangement, no member of the work group has a known amount of costs that it will ultimately pay; it only has an interim